Shoe Misfitteries.

There's scarcely any limit to the industries of the metropolis. On the east side, in the neighborhood of Grand and Norfolk streets, are several small stores, which are known to the irreverent wouth of that neighborhood as "boot and shoe misfitteries." The stock in trade is aunounced and is supposed to consist of boots and shoes made to order which have been returned by some oustomer whom they did not exactly suit. The mistiters are marvel ously skillful in their work and will decive anybody but an expert. A favorite trick is to restore a shoe and then put two or three blots of ink on the lining. The suave dealer offers you the lining and says, "Just as good as new, only some careless clerk dropped the ink on it, and it was ruined for that first class store.' Shoes made for Patti, Langtry, Princess Eulalia and other feminine celebrities are always kept in stock. The customers of these places are of a very good class and consist usually of young women who desire to get fashionable boots worth $10 or $15 for $4 or $5, and who do not mind the fact that these are shopworn, misfit or some secondhand so long as they can make their associates believe what the misfit dealer told them about the ink blots.-New York Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Full Supply.

Father Healey was walking on the seashore with a friend who was drinking the water of "the briny for health's sake. The invalid had taken one glassful, and, turning to the father, he said, "Do you think I might venture on another glass?' "Faith, I don't think it will be missed," said the father, with a droll glance, as he scanned the watery horizon.-Household Words.
